ABSTRACT

The round table is dedicated to rethinking the practices that have developed in the field of public catering, which should be considered as one of the important tools to ensure the achievement of the strategic goals of sustainable development (SDGs). The key condition for solving this problem is efforts to establish a healthy lifestyle as a priority social value, which actualizes the need to search for more effective forms of environmental education to establish rational and responsible public consumption. The topics of healthy eating and healthy living are gaining special relevance in the context of the coronavirus pandemic.

An important part of this agenda is the exchange of experience and adaptation, taking into account the Russian specifics, of the best domestic and foreign practices in the field of organizing sustainable procurement for state and municipal needs in the field of public catering and discussion of ways to consolidate the efforts of business, the state and the scientific and educational community.
